In Las Cruces, NM, Pacifica Network’s New Affiliate KTAL Asks, “How Are We Doing Together on This Collective Journey?”

With a couple of pros to shepherd the way, a radio station got rolling fast in Las Cruces, NM.

The first helpful hand came in 2003 from a man named Todd Urick from the organization Common Frequency. He reached out to Kevin Bixby, the Executive Director at a nonprofit called the

KOPN Celebrates 50 Years of Service to Columbia, Missouri: “The People Run the Radio”

This 50th anniversary year, for KOPN and its community, is a year of celebration. Archival broadcasts are being revived. A reunion has been planned. A book will be published to commemorate station milestones. And, after 49 years, they have a new studio.

In 1971, station founders, a small group of local university students, inspired by Berkeley’s KPFA and guided by the Pacifica Foundation, by Jeremy Landsman Southwest Environmental Center. They chatted through email, and Todd notified Kevin that, in two weeks, the FCC would open a window for nonprofit groups to apply for the opportunity to launch a low-power FM radio station. Todd explained how the window itself would only be open for two weeks. Kevin took a minute to think and wrote back, “Todd, I’m game. How do I submit an application?”

and his work with St Louis station KDNA, set out to put KOPN on the air. The station’s debut broadcast, on March 3, 1973, made KOPN only the 8th open access station in the country and the first to serve fewer than 100,000 people.

Today, broadcasting from its new and larger studios, the station continues to innovate, creating now a new podcast network that operates alongside their on-air programming.

On March 24, Diane Reinhardt spoke with Jet Ainsworth, KOPN’s Executive Director, about the station’s history, about its place in the Columbia community, and about the events of their yearlong celebration.

Round-Table: Consensus Building

Our June round-table is now available for viewing. Joseph Orozco, retired from KIDE in Hoopa, CA, gives his thoughts on consensus building.

The presentation draws from four books about communications and healthy organizations: Finding New Ground, by Robert J. Chadwick, Start with Why, by Simon Sinek, The Five Dysfunctions of a Team, a Leadership Fable, by Patrick Lencioni, and Crucial Conversations, Tools for Talking When Stakes are High, by Kerry Patterson. Joseph shares his understanding of how the tools presented in these books can be used to maintain a sensible radio station culture.
