Hawai‘i Governor Josh Green in February this year.

The wildfires not only burnt through parts of Upcountry Maui but ravaged the historical town of Lahaina—the former capital of the Kingdom of Hawai‘i, with more than 2,000 acres destroyed.

Meher Ali spoke with Braddah Tony, Myriam Laraway and Suzy Gastrein of KAKU about their experience of the wildfires and why giving a voice to their community is more than just a job.
